CAMDEN HIGHLINE

A competition to find a design team that can deliver a stunning design for the Camden Highline, a new park and linear walk linking London's Camden Town to King's Cross, on a disused railway viaduct.

Our client's aspiration is to create a park for everybody, connecting people in the area both physically and with new community activities.

THE PROJECT

Colander Associates is delighted to announce that it will be managing this high-profile competition on behalf of the Camden Highline Charity, to find an exceptional team to design a new park for London. The Camden Highline will occupy 1.1km of disused railway viaduct running from Camden Town to King's Cross and the vacant platforms at Camden Road station, with a number of access points along its route to connect it to road level. This is a very special project that needs an exceptional team both to design it and deliver it, one that balances design, community, nature and innovation alongside technical experience. For this reason, we invite submissions from partnerships which include established and experienced organisations alongside emerging designers.

JURY PANEL

As well as representatives of the Charity, the jury will include Alison Brooks of Alison Brooks Architects; Wayne Hemingway of Hemingway Design; Ed Jarvis of Camden Council; Indy Johar, Good Growth by Design Advocate to the Mayor of London; Kathryn Moore, President of the International Federation of Landscape Architects.
